VIETNAM

APRIL 2014

The image is a close-up photograph of a person's lower body, specifically their legs and feet. They are wearing traditional Vietnamese hats called non la, which are conical in shape and made of palm leaves. The hats are reflected in the water below, creating a symmetrical pattern. The background is slightly blurred, showing what appears to be a traditional wooden structure.

Editor's Note

ISSUE NO. 13
APRIL 2014

Will You Marry Me?

IT'D BE AN INJUSTICE to call this issue our "Wedding" issue. Because even though every girl dreams of her special day, where she can look like a fairy princess and be – literally – swept off her feet by her Prince Charming, in the end, it's just one day. It's the thousands of days afterwards that make up the "Ever After."

As someone recently engaged to a person of a different culture (he's English, I'm American), I can empathize with the highs and lows of being in a multicultural relationship. When we first met, it did feel like he was speaking a different language – cuppa, jumper, bird, knocking shop, I'm going to do one – were all foreign to me. That was until we started dating. Now I find myself saying "cuppa" when I want a spot of tea (which I rarely drank until I met him) or asking for a "jumper" when I'm cold. For my part, I've taught him the American way of pouring maple syrup all over your bacon and pancakes to create a delicious sweet and salty combo. I know it's not for everyone, but learning (and teaching) new things is one of the best things about being in a multicultural relationship. However, we're fortunate in that we speak (variations of) the same language, the building blocks to a relationship based on communication. However, as Michael Arnold writes in How Google Translates Love, not all couples share even one language but somehow the language of love is enough. Our cover series continues with a look inside a country wedding, where matrimonial traditions still run strong, and James Pham talks to a member of the Vietnamese Wife, Western Husband Club, a cartoonist who has documented with laughter the highs and lows of having a Vietnamese spouse.

Speaking of highs and lows, I've recently experienced them both in Saigon. Even though I've lived here for 10 years, it's so easy to settle into a comfortable lifestyle, gradually losing that wanderlust which brought us all here in the first place. So when I visited Lang Viet, the restaurant cum puppet theater show recently, it was like a cultural shot in the arm. The whimsical show made me feel like a kid again, finding real entertainment value in something that wasn't digitally enhanced or that required a screen of some sort. It was simply artists performing an age-old craft using basic traditional musical instruments and wooden puppets. The deliciously authentic food afterwards didn't hurt either. Read our review in the Wine & Dining section of the magazine and see if you don't agree.

One of the lows I experienced recently was being the victim of an attempted mugging not too far from the Oi office. Just two weeks before, a colleague had her phone brazenly stolen right out of her hoodie pocket as she was traveling by motorbike. I scoffed when friends and neighbors told me that D4 was especially crime-ridden, with a long and dark history. NPD Khanh ferrets out the history of the area in her article, Mistress of Mayhem, highlighting the roles of two people whose names are linked to D4's nefarious reputation – crime bosses Dung Ha and Nam Cam. I'm sure you'll find it equally fascinating to know how Nam Cam controlled D4 before he was executed, and that it was crime mistress Dung Ha who posthumously brought him down.

And sometimes it takes seeing Saigon through new eyes to make us all appreciate this amazing city in which we live. James Pham talks to Argentinean urban sketcher Jorge Royan, in the article aptly titled, Nothing Hidden, Everything Sacred, about how vibrant Saigon is, with life thriving and pulsating on the streets, in plain view.

And finally, we're very excited to be organizing our first of what I hope is many Oi Reader Contests. So much of what we write and photograph is for you, our readers, and we felt this contest would be a great way to interact with you, and for you to show us what you love about Vietnam. For complete information on how to enter (hint, it's really easy!) and the great prizes up for grabs, see the Oi website (www.oivietnam.com) or check us out on Facebook. It's your turn to show us what you've got! ■

What: Dance Screening

Where: Snap Café, 32 Tran Ngoc Dien, D2; 7:30pm

About: Every Little Step, a 2008 American documentary film produced and directed by James Stern and Adam Del Deo, will be shown to those interested in joining the dance community in HCMC. It follows the process of casting the Broadway revival of A Chorus Line and explores the history of the award-winning musical, beginning with informal interviews with Broadway dancers conducted by Michael Bennett that served as its basis.

Contact: Call 3519 4490 or email info@dancentervn.com

APRIL 17

What: African jazz soul singer Gasandji

Where: IDECAF (28 Le Thanh Ton, D1), 8pm; tickets cost VND100,000, VND50,000 for students

About: Born in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, Gasandji defies, as a sort of mystery, the sacred dimension of both her music and songs. Her first theatrical experiences happened when she was a dancer-choreographer. Gasandji became famous when she produced her own shows and when she appeared as a guest star for artists such as Lokua, Keziah Jones and Imany.

Gasandji sings mainly of herself. At first sight she does not resemble her music. This Congo-born artist stands out for her rather unconventional haircut; her voice is instead gentle and soft. Her music has been labeled afro-jazz, or afro-soul. She released her self-titled album in 2013 and won the Award « Coup de Cœur Francophone 2013 » of the Academy of Music Charles Cros.

Contact: Call 3520 6863 or email: culturel@consulfrance-hcm.org for more info.

APRIL 19

What: Color Me Run

Where: Phu My Hung, D7; 3pm

About: Color Me Run is a unique combination of a running event and music festival. For the first time in Vietnam, you can experience a 5km run while being splashed from head to toe by colored powder. The fun will be followed by international music artists Kelly Rowland (of Destiny's Child) and Timomatic (top three of Australia's Got Talent 2011). Registration fee costs VND400,000.

APRIL 26

What: Open Day

Where: European International School (EIS), Thao Dien, D2; 9am-12pm

About: The European International School welcomes all interested parents to come and meet teachers, speak to the principal and see the Science and Technology classrooms or the Early Years Centre and find out why EIS is more than just an ordinary school. EIS offers a supportive and challenging academic education from early years to Grade 12 (K-12). Through its motto “Educating Global Citizens,” the school promotes intercultural understanding and respect, not as an alternative to a sense of national identity, but as an essential part of life in the 21st century.

What: ANZAC Friendship Match

Where: Vung Tau

About: The ANZAC Friendship Match between the Vietnam Swans and the Malaysian Warriors aims to promote a strong relationship between Vietnam, Australia, and New Zealand. For the first time in the Swannies' history there will be three games at the Lord Mayor's Oval. The first will be a ladies/mixed match, to be followed by the curtain raising Legends vs All Stars Game and the main event, Swans vs the Warriors. Following the match, a McMillan Dinner and Charity Auction will be held at the Imperial Hotel where Alex Jezaulenko will be the guest speaker. Alex is one of the most influential players of the Australian game, being a member of the AFL Team of the Century and an inductee of the Hall of Fame as a Legend.

Pre-booking tickets for the dinner is a must as it is expected to sell out. (Ticket prices will be USD60). There will be buses leaving HCMC on both Thursday (for those who want to travel to attend the Long Tan ANZAC Dawn Service) and Friday leaving the Commonwealth Bank (55 Nguyen Du, District 1).

The country by numbers

61,980

Big Macs were sold in McDonald's first month of operation in Vietnam. The city's first McDonald's has been packed since the day it opened and it's common to see long lines of cars and motorbikes snaking through the drive-thru, also a first in Vietnam. Also, 22,500 customers were served in the first 24 hours of operation.

USD500 MILLION

atomic energy center is being planned by Vietnam and Russia. The Russian government will provide loans for the development of the center, Vyacheslav Pershukov, deputy general director of Rosatom Atomic Energy Group, said last month during a dialogue in Da Lat.

Rosatom Atomic Energy Group and the Vietnamese Ministry of Science and Technology are preparing the necessary conditions for the construction of the center in 2015, Pershukov continued. They have selected the locations and formulated a feasibility plan for the two units – one in Da Lat or its adjacent area, and the other in Hanoi. The center is expected to be completed in 2020 when 400 to 500 Vietnamese and foreign experts will be employed to work at the two units.

Vietnamese inmates write apology letters to victims. Last month the management board of Thu Duc prison concluded the "Writing Letters of Apology" program launched last year by the Ministry of Public Security at a ceremony in Ham Tan District, Binh Thuan Province.

Almost 90 percent of the total prisoners at Thu Duc took part in the program and wrote letters of apology to their victims, the families of their victims as well as to their parents, spouses, friends and others to seek forgiveness for their crimes.

The apology letters include those from former doctor Tran Anh Huy at Children's Hospital I, located in Ho Chi Minh City, who was given a seven year sentence in 2013 for causing a road accident that killed two people and injured five others in 2011; from Tran Chinh, who was sentenced to 18 years behind bars for murder; and from 20-year-old prisoner Nguyen Thi Hong Loan to her mother for dishonoring her family.

will be used from the Viet Nam Public Utility Telecommunication Service Fund to help poor households replace analogue televisions with digital ones. This is part of the country's plan for television digitalization in which analogue TVs would be eased out in the five biggest cities by 2015, said Deputy Minister of Information and Telecommunication and head of the plan's steering committee Le Nam Thang.

Thang said they are conducting a survey on television usage by households and making a list of beneficiaries who would get support. The beneficiaries include poor and near-poor households and families which get preferential treatment for their contribution to the country's revolution. The disbursement would be in line with the steps being taken to spread digital TV technology. The ministry also recommended that people buy Vietnamese set-top boxes with digital TVs to save money and to receive television signals more effectively.

preschools in 50 cities and provinces across Vietnam are unlicensed, according to a recent report by the Ministry of Education and Training.

Only 34 percent of the 16,000 private preschools that take care of kids under 36 months have a license, and most of the licensed schools are family-run.

There are nearly 1,200 unlicensed preschools in the northern province of Bac Ninh alone, while the northern city of Hai Phong has around 8,000 children enrolled at unregulated preschools, according to the ministry's figures. Abuse and poor-quality education, which have been reported by local media, stem from a lack of governmental authorization for these schools to operate.

JAPANESE BBQ

Vui Vui, a restaurant specializing in barbecue and Japanese-style hot pot, is the newest addition to Saigon's Japanese restaurants. Located at 125A Tran Quoc Thao, D3, Vui Vui opens daily from 11am to 10pm. The highlight of Vui Vui restaurant is barbecue with beef imported directly from the US and sauces to marinate the meat before grilling. It also offers a variety of set lunches including Yakiudon—Stir fried udon noodle, Kimuchi Pokka—Stir fried kim chi and pork, Chige—Spicy hot pot, Sukiyaki lunch set and Purukogi—Korean style BBQ. The restaurant offers free rice, iced tea and dessert for diners who order set lunches, each set priced from VND95,000 to VND150,000. And until May, diners who order one portion of meat will be offered free vegetables, kim chi, salad and rice. In addition, you can also choose one of two types of soup or Korean style steamed eggs.

The restaurant has two floors with each floor accommodating approximately 100 guests. The second floor will only open to serve big groups of diners who reserve in advance. Diners can sit at the table and Western-style sofa or on the wood floor.

LITERARY DAY

It was great times for Renaissance International School Saigon (www.renaissance.edu.vn) as author and poet Kenn Nesbitt came to spend a day with pupils. Nesbitt was named the US Children's Poet Laureate in 2013 and has been touring schools throughout Asia raising awareness about children's natural love of poetry. The pupils at Renaissance enjoyed poems and other writing, videos, songs and games. Some pupils performed dramatic presentations of Nesbitt's poem while others composed a song based on one of his many humorous poems. Many pupils were inspired to write their own poems. Nesbitt did presentations to Early Years through to Year 8 pupils. He spent time in a special writing workshop with the winners of a Primary School poetry contest. Students treated Nesbitt to special presentations and interpretations of his writing, and students learned what it takes to be a writer.

SOUTH EAST ASIAN MATHS COMPETITION 2014

Students and staff at the British International School (www.bisvietnam.com) were honored last month by a visit from Professor Marcus du Sautoy from Oxford University. Prof. du Sautoy spent the day at BIS interacting with students during workshops and meeting with the BIS Maths Department. Students learned why the number 17 is so important, other than being the professor's football shirt number.

Professor Du Sautoy was also the guest speaker at the recent South East Asian Maths Competition (SEAMC). SEAMC 2014 was held at the British Vietnamese International School (BVIS), Binh Chanh from February 27 to March 2. Marcus du Sautoy is the Charles Simonyi Professor for the Public Understanding of Science and Professor of Mathematics at the University of Oxford and a Fellow of New College. In 2004 Esquire chose him as one of the 100 most influential people under 40 in Britain and in 2009 he was awarded the Royal Society's Faraday Prize, the UK's premier award for excellence in communicating science.

SEAMC is an annual two-day event organized by local volunteer teachers on a rotational basis throughout the region. Hundreds of international school students, aged 15 or younger, and their teachers come together for a long weekend to share their enthusiasm for Mathematics and problem solving.

LEARNING TO BIKE

FirstBIKE now offers balance bikes in Vietnam. FirstBIKE aids in the development of the child's essential balance and provides a no-stress method of learning to ride a bike. It eliminates the need for training wheels which are counterproductive and do not support proper posture or spinal development. Balance bikes, which are extremely popular in Europe, UK, USA and most of the West, are best for kids from about 22 months to five-years-old. The bikes are lightweight, comfortable and provide maneuverability to ensure the child can travel long distances without getting tired.

Visit www.firstbike.com.vn for more info.

CALLING YOUR BLUFF

The Bluffs Ho Tram Strip (www.thegrandhotramstrip.com) has opened for preview play along Vietnam's south-central coast. Designed by legendary golfer Greg Norman, who spent 331 consecutive weeks at top the world golf rankings, The Bluffs Ho Tram Strip trades on geographical traits that course architects dream of. Routed over and around towering seaside sand dunes less than two hours southeast of Ho Chi Minh City, The Bluffs Ho Tram Strip is one of the few championship-caliber links courses with significant elevation changes, making for a golf experience that's as much a feast for the eyes as it is a challenge to tame. While the highest point of the rugged, windswept property is 50 meters above sea level, on the 15th green, one of the most spectacular spots comes earlier in the round, on the 4th hole.

When finished, The Bluffs Ho Tram Strip will include a 2,300 square meter clubhouse housing an array of dining outlets and a PGA-staffed driving range with more than 3,000 square meters worth of practice and training facilities. Limited Golf Membership opportunities will be rolled out in March. The Bluffs Ho Tram Strip is among several components of The Grand Ho Tram Strip's first stage of development. The ambitious project already features a 541-room upscale hotel, over 10 restaurants and bars, a spa, nightclub, convention center and casino with 90 gaming tables and over 600 slot machines.

TAXI BOOKING

Easy Taxi, the world's leading free mobile taxi application is now available in Vietnam, starting with Ho Chi Minh City and promises to soon expand to other big cities including Hanoi. Working with major taxi companies, they are hooked up to the most reliable taxis in the city. Available to download on Android, iOS, Blackberry and Windows operating systems, Easy Taxi allows users to book and track for the nearest available reliable taxi for any trip. With one simple click on their phone, passengers can interact directly with taxi drivers, and gain access to additional details such as phone number and car model. All trip records and drivers' data are saved in the app, which could be helpful in case passengers need to retrieve their forgotten belongings. Easy Taxi offers both drivers and taxi companies a different channel to generate more rides, hence, more revenues, especially in a competitive market for taxi companies. The application was founded in 2012 and is backed by Rocket Internet, the world's largest Internet incubator.

Nothing Hidden, Everything Sacred

Sketching the textures of Vietnam

TEXT BY JAMES PHAM ILLUSTRATIONS BY JORGE ROYAN

"IN THE SECULAR West, where nothing is sacred, everything seems hidden; yet in Asia, where nothing is hidden, everything is sacred." — Steve McCurry, photographer of the iconic "Afghan Girl" image.

McCurry was speaking of India, "where millions have no home but the streets, virtually every life event is carried out in public: prayer, eating, sleeping, nursing, crude dentistry, even bodily functions," but his description could easily apply to Vietnam, where life, in all its gritty glory, is lived on the streets.

That sense of raw, uninhibited openness has inspired many an artist, including Argentinean architect, photographer and urban sketcher, Jorge Royan, on a recent trip through Vietnam. Armed with his pencil case and watercolor box, this swarthy, animated man walked Saigon's back alleys, peered into homes and generally got lost in the textures of the city.

"In the US, people may be sitting and eating together in a McDonald's, but you feel nothing from them. They're hidden behind a mask. In Buenos Aires [where Jorge lives], there's a long history of insecurity, so everything is secluded, everything is behind doors. You go to the West, you have the cars and the front of houses — that's all you see. They're capsules. Here in Vietnam, you see the shops, the houses; people eat out on the street so you can see what they're eating. On motorcycles, you see everything they carry. Amazing! There's also a huge sense of community, people living in swarms of social hubs, eating, working together. Everything has color. Here, things have texture, depth, light and dark. In Vietnam, everything has a soul!"

With a background in architecture and photography, Jorge brings a tangible structure, a certain proportional rigidity to his detailed sketches which take on strong going about their everyday lives.

Jorge is a part of a growing movement called "urban sketching," a group of like-minded individuals finding camaraderie through a shared love of paper and ink. Only reluctantly introduced to sketching about three years ago ("I thought it would be boring"), he says he was instantly hooked. "It became about where to sketch and with whom to sketch. I used to work in photography and there's no people there; it's highly competitive. Everyone hates everyone. But with sketching, people are very friendly."

Jorge's tools are mainly pencils and ink pens with calligraphic nibs and a set of watercolor paints, sometimes stored in a jerry-rigged Altoids box or a tin of Starbucks mints with which he creates delightful vignettes, some incredibly detailed, of places he's traveled: a café stairwell in France, a barbershop in Seattle or a piazza in Bologna.

"In my country [of Argentina], we live in constant fear. In Buenos Aires, there is a lot of violence and social confrontation. It's not safe. [When I sketch outside] I sit with my back against the wall. Guys could just walk up and say, 'I like your watercolors. Give them to me.' That's not a joke. But here in Vietnam, I've been working late nights on the streets and it never crossed my mind that I was in danger. I can find myself in a narrow alley, in the dark, and people will look at me but they'll be friendly."

When he's not able to draw in situ, Jorge architectural tones. In his one month trip visiting Hanoi, Hue, Hoi An (where he coincidentally met O!'s "Postcards From Vietnam" columnist and fellow watercolorist Bridget March) and Ho Chi Minh City, Jorge has been filling up a smaller Moleskine notebook with his hour-long sketches of cyclo drivers, itinerant vendors and people

"There's something wonderful with only a piece of paper and a pencil, nothing more," he says, adding sternly: "Your generation is missing out. With AutoCAD or an iPad, you cannot add in all the details. You need to be able to sketch."

often falls back on his photography skills, collecting images which he can sketch back in his Buenos Aires studio, eschewing the romantic notion of drawing inspiration from direct observation. "There's a myth in my eyes that you have to draw right there to get the movement, the atmosphere of the place. Me? I feel nothing. It's not about the atmosphere, the smells. Things are not things. Things are carriers of patches of color, black and white. I don't care about the things. I don't give a damn whether you can smell the steam from the food. I admire people who can feel the atmosphere. I wish I were like that but it's not me. I think you can find the right angle, capture it in a photo and transfer it into art with all the time in the world."

Instead of the "feel" of a place, what Jorge looks to capture are angles, proportions and depth. "As a photographer and a sketcher, you must be like a bird," he says. "If you dropped a bird here, he would see all the corners, high and low. If the best angle is up there [as he points to the corner of the café we're sitting in], you have to find a way to get there. When you begin moving, things change their position and space. It's amazing how things change even if you move 10 cm to the side or to the front. For me, half the fun and half the problem is to find the right angle. Climb something, get under the table, put things in front of something else to get depth." In his kit, Jorge often carries a Da Vinci frame, a graduated cellophane window, used to determine perspective and proportion, to help re-create 3D images in 2D.

A Generation Missing Out

For this artist, the purity of Old School rings true. "There's something wonderful with only a piece of paper and a pencil, nothing more," he says, adding sternly: "Your generation is missing out. With AutoCAD or an iPad, you cannot add in all the details. You need to be able to sketch. I see how my daughter uses the pencil and her hand trembles. It's like a different animal to her." Photography is different, he's quick to point out. "Digital is better than film. It's amazing what colors digital can pick up in the shadows. Shooting film is like hunting your own food. It's heroic, but who wants to be a hero?"

For the most part, Jorge is a proponent of simplicity. "The fewer tools you use, the better. On internet forums, you'll find mostly people talking about equipment, lenses. But to talk about composition and framing, it's much tougher. If you get rid of all that and you just want to focus on an idea, the fewer tools you have in your box, the better. To choose something is to renounce other things," he adds philosophically.

Originally involved in Urban Sketchers, a network of thousands of artists across the world who draw cities where they live or travel, Jorge now manages a much smaller Facebook group called Sketching Workshops, with around 150 even-level members, including four from Vietnam.

"I believe sketching is the best thing I've found for the benefit of many because sketching is really an excuse. Sketching is the 'what.' What comes is the 'how.' Through sketching, you can connect with people all over the world. You can exchange ideas and make friends and make something that's pure, that doesn't depend on screens, that's not made on an iPad. It's something so basic, so natural, so pure that it helps people join together and meet all over the world through the simple pleasure of drawing. It's not about the sketch itself. Who cares about the drawing? It's about the exchange."

For more of Jorge's work, visit his art blog at www.sketchesjr.blogspot.com or visit the Sketching Workshop page on Facebook for useful tips on how to begin sketching, including pen and ink work and drawing patterns and shapes. ■

THE MYTH:

Is it true that the new metro lines will just cover District 1?

SPECULATION ON WHERE Saigon's metro lines will be located has been rampant since as early as 2001 when city officials announced plans for an underground public transportation system. It has taken seven years for a blueprint to be finalized and a map of the planned metro system to be released to the public. According to the map, the metro system will cover the entire city and its surrounding areas (Suoi Tien, Binh Chanh, among others) and comprise of six lines. The heart of this system will be in the area around Ben Thanh Market, a triangular hub made up by Ben Thanh Station, Tao Dan Park Station, and Cong Hoa Roundabout Station.

LINE 1 RED LINE

Ben Thanh - Suoi Tien stretches from the central hub, through to the Saigon Opera House and District 2 zone, heading for Suoi Tien theme park

LINE 2 PURPLE LINE

Thu Thiem - Tay Ninh Bus Center starts from Thu Thiem new city zone, a satellite development zone of Saigon, passing through Ben Thanh central hub, and ends at the Tay Ninh Bus Station, a transportation hub from which passengers can continue to other parts of the city

LINE 3 GREEN LINE

Binh Phuoc - Tan Kien starts from Binh Phuoc, passing through Ben Thanh central hub, and ends at Tan Kien

LINE 4 | YELLOW LINE

Phu My Hung - District 12 is more or less regarded as an inner city line as it starts from Phu My Hung within District 7, passing through the central hub in District 1 and ending in District 12

LINE 5 | BLUE LINE

Can Giuoc Bus Center - Saigon Bridge is one of the two lines that does not pass through Ben Thanh central hub. Line 5 connects with Line 1 at the Saigon Bridge Station, follows a half loop passing through the District 1 and 2 interim, the districts of Phu Nhuan and Tan Binh, then ends at the Can Giuoc bus center

LINE 6

Ba Queo - Phu Lam is the shortest line of the six. Line 6 connects Ba Queo Station of Line 2 and Phu Lam Station of Line 3

Out of the six lines, there are also two special branches that start from Tan Son Nhat airport and connect with Line 4 at Gia Dinh Park Station (in Phu Nhuan District) and Line 5 at Lang Cha Ca Station (gray dotted lines).

So far, only Line 1 has a date when construction will start - this year. ■

Mistress of Mayhem

Vietnam's notorious female crime boss

TEXT BY NPD KHANH IMAGE BY LE HAI

DUNG HA'S DEATH on June 3, 2004 marked an end to Saigon's criminal empire. She died in the heart of District 1, felled by a bullet through her head in front of K bar on 17 Bui Thi Xuan. Her violent end sparked a four-year-long bloody conflict in the shadows of the Vietnamese underworld. Within those four years, a countrywide manhunt was conducted to ferret out the true murderer. Criminal turf wars burned down streets in District 4 and areas from Ho Chi Minh City to Hai Phong. Internal purges of crime syndicates became daily news, and the press uncovered a rising number of backroom political skirmishes. Eventually, all this culminated in the arrest and execution of Saigon's most notorious crime boss, Nam Cam, and the dissolution of his empire. Some believed it was out of fear of her growing power that Nam Cam betrayed her and ordered her assassination.

Who is this woman whose death marked the beginning of the end for Nam Cam?

Dung Ha was a godmother and the leader of her own Hai Phong-based crime syndicate, whose size, reach and power rivaled that of Nam Cam's. Born in 1965 in the coastal town of Hai Phong, Dung Ha, whose real name is Vu Thi Hoang Dung, was the youngest child in a family of six. Her home was a tiny house in alleyway number 23 on Trang Trinh road. Her childhood was spent on the banks of the Lap River, in between the Iron Market (infamous for its infestation of petty crimes) and the town's prison. This short dirt path connecting the two hotspots of crime and incarceration served as the background to Dung Ha's formative years – so no one was particularly surprised that by the time she was a teenager, Dung Ha had a long rap sheet consisting of pickpocketing and petty theft.

Vietnam's Bonnie and Clyde

In her long and colorful history, Dung Ha had many lovers of both genders, many of whom she used for her own selfish gains and vice versa; however her relationship with Hung Com stood out for its sincerity and the lengths to which she was willing to go for his sake.

The two grew up under different circumstances. Hung Com had a decent childhood and was raised in a middle class area in Lach Tray, Hai Phong. But despite his auspicious upbringing, Hung Com had turned to a life of crime and by the time the pair met, and had already become an infamous criminal in the underworld hierarchy. Dung Ha's relationship with Hung Com elevated her reputation in the eyes of her peers, and eventually led her down the path to bigger, more daring, more ambitious, and finally more dangerous crimes.

Dung Ha's devotion to her lover was tested when in 1990 Hung Com was arrested by the police and sentenced to death. In response, she organized and personally led an attempt to break him out of prison the day before his execution, the mere planning for which was unimaginable at the time for the Vietnamese underworld – carried out by a female criminal in the name of love, no less.

Her attempt failed.

Hung Com's death marked Dung Ha's spiraling descent into the pit of the underworld. Over the next two decades, she built an empire out of illegal gambling joints, loan sharking, drug trafficking and racketeering. Her gang controlled the entire city of Hai Phong and in the early 1990s, she began her spread southward to Saigon – into Nam Cam's territory.

What happened in Ho Chi Minh City between Nam Cam and Dung Ha is unclear, except for their deaths. The latter died from a gunshot wound to the head, while the former was executed by a police squad.

Dung Ha's funeral in her hometown, called the Funeral of the White Flowers, was flooded with white roses from her crew, neighbors, relatives, friends and even surviving rivals, with a procession stretching two kilometers from her childhood home to the city's Opera House.

Despite the crimes she committed, many claimed they had flourished under her rule and felt protected against criminals from other cities. As the Vietnamese saying goes: "No matter how terrible the crimes committed, if the criminal reaches truly great heights and goes where no one else dared to go before, she will still be remembered as legendary." ■

Ever After

LOVE AND MARRIAGE IN VIETNAM

Many foreigners come to Vietnam and fall in love – not just with the culture, the history, the scenery, but with the local people who become their boyfriends, girlfriends, or, eventually, husbands and wives. However, jumping into a relationship with someone from a different culture can be a bit like stepping onto a minefield. Challenges abound where to tolerate might not be enough, to accept might be okay but still not enough, to celebrate might be the way to go. So in that spirit, let's eat, drink and be married!

HOW GOOGLE TRANSLATES LOVE

For two married couples, language barriers were not a problem with the help of a free computer translation service

TEXT BY MICHAEL ARNOLD ☰ IMAGES BY ADAM ROBERT YOUNG

IF YOU'RE LOOKING for a truth universally acknowledged with regards to Western men in want of a Vietnamese wife, you're likely to find most eligible bachelors putting "speaks my language" close to the top of the list of desirable attributes in a local woman. For most expat Romeos, a reasonable grasp of English on the part of their perfect match is a prerequisite to any long-term international relationship, let alone a lifelong commitment – and it's hard to imagine real love breaking through such an intimate cultural barrier without the bride-to-be having comfortably made it through her ESL classes first.

There are, of course, always exceptions to the rule. When 58-year-old Franklin Atkins first landed in Ho Chi Minh City from the US five years ago, he had a single purpose – to "get me a wife" – with language ability not being an issue in the slightest.

"Really, the first two weeks, I was just having fun," he says candidly, sitting with Cuc – whose significant limitations with English are surpassed only by Franklin's non-existent Vietnamese. "I was like a kid in a candy store. But after that I thought, it's time to do what I came here for. A friend of mine from the States called and asked how I was doing, and I said, 'I'm having fun, but I haven't found anybody yet.' Then he said he had a niece. So he called her, and then she showed up."

"The first day, we just talked," he says. "It was funny because she didn't speak a word of English. I'm talking to her in English and she's talking in Vietnamese, and we're looking at each other, laughing at each other. That's how we met."

With the help of a translator, Cuc managed to make a good enough impression on Franklin that his decision came fairly quickly. "I asked her to marry me, I gave her my word. I gave her my ring, and I said, as far as I'm concerned, we're married. That was five years ago."

For Cuc, the leap of faith was far more difficult. A country girl through and through, Cuc had never laid eyes on a foreigner before the night they met – and what was more, at 39, she'd never even had a boyfriend.

"I took her on a two-week vacation," says Franklin. "We were sitting in the van, looking at each other, laughing, and she took my hand, and she started scrubbing it with a towel. So I asked the translator, will you ask her what she's doing to my hand? She replied, 'His hands are dirty, I'm trying to clean them.' That told me right then that she'd never seen a black person's hands. I told them that's the first time I ever had a woman try to wash the black off of me!"

While Cuc's initial interest in marrying an American was the chance to be closer to her uncle, things changed soon after accepting Franklin's proposal – her uncle unexpectedly passed away just weeks after the couple met.

"As soon as my uncle died, I wanted to back out," she says. "I didn't have any other reason to go to the States. But then he really started to show me that he cared about me, and he was honestly making an effort to marry me. So I let things be. After he flew home, he called me five times a week, which showed me that he cared a lot. I appreciated that."

"HER KNOWING ENGLISH, OR NOT KNOWING ENGLISH, ISN'T GOING TO CHANGE THE WAY I FEEL ABOUT HER. IT DOESN'T MAKE A DIFFERENCE. THAT'S NOT WHAT THE RELATIONSHIP IS BASED ON."

"She had a limited vocabulary," says Franklin about the phone conversations they'd go through on an almost nightly basis. "Hello, how are you, I miss you. I love you." It was kind of like a script. But it got better. This was during the first two years. We used to laugh about that conversation, because you need to laugh. I would say my part, and then she would say her part. We'd talk for five minutes. We pretty much said the same thing."

Not being able to fully communicate certainly tested the relationship, but Franklin was resolute in his decision to keep things going – largely because of the strong impression he had of Vietnamese women. "I had a lot of clients of mine that were Vietnamese," he says. "All the way up to Illinois. And all of the women, I just stood back and I watched them. In different houses, and in different places. And they were all pretty much the same. They was all nice. So I said, I'll take one of them, because I don't want another wife that I gotta live with this issue and that issue."

"The thing I liked about them was," he adds, "they all was respectful. They tended to the needs of their husbands."

Franklin visits Vietnam periodically, although the couple's wedding has been indefinitely delayed by the local administration's insistence that a husband and wife must be able to communicate on a satisfactory level before being issued with a marriage license. The pair now hope that the length of their relationship will be sufficient evidence of their romantic commitment. During this time, of course, their communication skills have significantly improved, although not so much in terms of spoken language.

"We got that Google thing," says Franklin. "I got real good at typing. But that thing can change it around. I learned real quick that you don't type no long letters. I typed this thing once, and she started to cry. So I had to call the translator, and she spent 30 to 45 minutes just trying to console her. She still cried all night long. All I'd said was, you need to stop acting like a kid. But Google said I'd called her a hooker. Now what I do is I just write one line at a time."

"It's the simple things in life that are important," he says. "I knew she couldn't speak English when I met her. It's not like she could speak it and then all of a sudden she forgot it. To be honest, I don't mind if she never speaks English. Or let me rephrase that – her knowing English, or not knowing English, isn't going to change the way I feel about her. It doesn't make a difference. That's not what the relationship is based on."

READ TILL THE END

For Moises Ornelas, who just married his local sweetheart earlier this year, the opposite is probably true – although in his case, the relationship has been largely reliant on his own progress in Vietnamese. A traveler and lover of languages by nature, Moises arrived in Ho Chi Minh City to further his studies, and ended up with a lot more than he bargained for.

"I wanted to learn a difficult language," says Moises. "I spoke English and Spanish. I wanted to learn something different that people wouldn't expect to come out of my mouth. I wasn't interested in looking for girls. I like Vietnamese girls, but I prefer Vietnamese-American girls."

When Moises first met his wife Thu, she was 18 and still in school. "She had no attraction to me," he says. "I was a lot bigger then than I am now, just this fat American guy. My Vietnamese was horrible. There was nothing special there. But then I saw her in an ao dai at a convention. I just saw her there, and I thought wow. Gorgeous. The ao dai did it. She was beautiful. Just all good."

Fortunately, Thu's naturally friendly character saw the pair become Facebook friends, which opened the door to an online correspondence that began when Moises returned to the States. As Thu's skills in English were so basic, Moises' conversations with Thu became his major channel for studying Vietnamese.

"We just messaged each other randomly, just so I could improve," says Moises.

"Eventually it started to be every day, an hour or two hours. As we were talking, I wouldn't know certain words she was asking me about, so I would use Google Translate. Over about six months I'd go over every conversation, reread it, restudy it, take all the words out I didn't know and check in a dictionary. If you look at my vocab list you can see everything we talked about, progressively. From the beginning when we were just friends, all the different things in our day."

It wasn't long before feelings began to develop between the two. "She took some convincing," Moises says, "but I did really like her. So I decided to come back to Vietnam and see if our Internet conversation translated into something real. She warned me before I went, she said, well, I only like you 55 percent, and if you get here and your Vietnamese is crap, then we're breaking up."

What Moises didn't know then was that Thu wasn't about to enter into the most important relationship of her life without doing some digging first. She decided to send a letter to Moises' church congregation in the States for an insight into his character.

"They really dogged me out," he complains. "They wrote and said, he's not really stable, he likes to move around a lot. He really likes to go out with a bunch of girls all the time. Then in the very last paragraph, they said but, he really takes care of the congregation, he spends time with the elderly, he watches what other people's needs are, he's got a great heart... it wasn't until the last paragraph that they really represented the whole picture. So I was like, man, if you'd never gotten past paragraph three, four or five, that would have been it!"

When the couple eventually decided to marry, they also had difficulties with the application process – but fortunately, Moises' language abilities made things a little easier. "We had to do a psych evaluation," he explains. "When she did it, the fee was VND400,000. The doctor asked a bunch of questions, what's your Mom's birthday, what's your Dad's birthday, and so on. But she couldn't remember his birthday. So they said oh, you must be crazy. Go talk to the secretary. If you can't remember your Dad's birthday, it means you're crazy. The secretary said oh, in order for us to file, I need VND50,000. And the doctor needs an extra VND200,000.

"So when I go in, she told me, just remember the birthday. I was thinking, this is ridiculous, because they don't even speak Spanish or English. How are they going to test my mental health? So I go in, I pay the fee, I sit down, he's like, 'Uh, what's your name. Birthday Mom Dad'. I tell him in Vietnamese. 'What do you do?' So I tell him in Vietnamese. He says 'OK, pay extra VND250,000 and all done'. At least he didn't call me crazy."

For the past several weeks since the wedding ceremony, the young couple have started their married life in a small hem in the Pham Ngu Lao area. As they still speak exclusively Vietnamese, Moises has started to see things from the perspective of a local. "We don't see each other as foreigners," he says. "I consider myself Vietnamese, really. I've changed a lot. I even point at foreigners. I say, 'Look at the foreigner,' and she says, 'What do you think you are?'"

"I DON'T THINK THERE'S ANYTHING WRONG WITH THAT, BECAUSE WE'RE TRYING TO MAKE EACH OTHER HAPPY. I HAVE TO REMEMBER OUR VOWS ALL THE TIME, TO CHERISH, TO LOVE..."

Going native may not have been Moises' original plan, but for now, it seems to be working out. "There's a lot that I agree to but I don't like," he admits. "I don't think there's anything wrong with that, because we're trying to make each other happy. I have to remember our vows all the time, to cherish, to love... there's a lot of things here that I don't agree with. But it's not so important, it's not the most important thing. I guess the most important thing is to show her that I love her. I always said that before, but it wasn't until we were married that I realized I really had to express that." ■

MY BIG FAT COUNTRY WEDDING

The Vietnamese on the other side of the Saigon Bridge refer to weddings as “paying off the mouth’s debt”

TEXT BY NPD KHANH ☃ IMAGES BY NGOC TRAN

ON A RECENT Saturday, past the Saigon River and the District 2 development zones, deep into Nhon Trach bordering Dong Nai Province, blushing bride My Trinh married her fellow villager, Tai. While that Saturday marked the start of the feasting, the wedding process itself had begun weeks ago, starting with the dam ngo, a private ceremony where the groom asks the bride's parents for her hand in marriage, followed by offerings from the groom's family to the bride's family.

The dam ngo officially kick started their countryside wedding, which traditionally are long, multi-phased, costly affairs that include several days of feasting and often land the newly wedded couple into debt. However, without a lavish ceremony, their friends, families and the community would most likely not acknowledge the matrimony. Regardless of whether the married are rich or poor, firstborns or youngest, a small wedding feast is a lifelong source of shame and, in the rural Vietnamese consciousness, never to be suffered even at the cost of crippling financial losses.

Following the dam ngo is the van danh, a complicated and costly ritual involving gifts, which can be anything from gold and betel leaves and areca nuts to a roasted whole pig and cash, carried by a succession of family members or hired gift bearers, an event which brings out the entire village.

Only with the completion of these two ceremonies are the couple considered engaged. But My Trinh's fiancée status lasted only two days as the couple hurried to their wedding feast. The invitations had already been sent out and on Saturday morning, the guests arrived by the hundreds. These weren't only close friends and family, but also coworkers and distant relatives, many of whom traveled across the country to attend the wedding. Anyone that was considered important was also invited.

The wedding started at 8am as children dressed in red, arranged by My Trinh's family, tied ropes on the door of her house. Tai was only allowed entry once he had paid the tolls, a few pieces of candy, to the children to persuade them to untie the ropes. An elder bearing incense led the procession into the bride's home, to give his blessing.

From the bride's house, the procession made its way to the couple's future home. At the door, Trinh's mother-in-law came out to greet her new daughter, holding a limestone pot in front of her face as she let Trinh pass through. This greeting is a small rite in itself, signifying that both sides hope to never bear any ill will towards the other.

LET THE FEAST BEGIN

Once the groom's family had shown the bride to her carefully arranged wedding bed and the couple shared a cup of rice wine, the wedding feast was finally able to start. The feast is the longest, most rigorous and costly of all rites of marriage for both My Trinh and Tai. Unlike their city counterparts, countryside weddings can be four to five days of nonstop eating and partying. On the first day they received the closest guests and nearest living relatives. In a show of solidarity, the relatives stayed to help out with all the wedding tasks including the cooking, the greeting, prepping the bride, dealing with drunken guests, and the cleaning up afterwards.

The next few days saw the arrival of guests from far off provinces. Some were distant relatives (whom the couple didn't personally know) and coworkers from My Trinh's office in the city.

Only when the last of the guests trickled out and the wedding tent was disassembled on the fourth day did the wedding feast officially end and the bride and groom allowed to relax.

"Betel and areca. It used to be that without betel and areca and without a proper multi-day feast, it wouldn't be considered a wedding at all," said My Trinh at the end of her own wedding. "Most of my friends and coworkers in Saigon do not keep the traditions anymore. They don't hold the dam ngo. Only some of them still do the an hoi (public engagement ceremony). And the wedding itself is more or less just a half-day party with religious props at either a church or nowhere at all."

"They can do all this because city life wouldn't have allowed them a truly traditional wedding anyway. A five-day city wedding feast the same size as mine comes with a bill in the billions. Even all the way out here, in this little village, it costs us nearly a hundred million for the food, the wedding tent, the dresses, and the entertainment. It will take all our lives to repay that kind of debt. And can you imagine pleading off work for an entire week? My boss would sack me," she explained.

"To be honest, I'm a little bit jealous of my city friends," My Trinh confessed. "But it's done. We have paid our 'debts of the mouth'. We can now start our life with each other. Build our own future. But if there's one part of the traditional wedding I look forward to, it's the part where we get to count our lucky money." ■

VIETNAMESE WIFE, WESTERN HUSBAND CLUB

A humorous look at the highs and lows of a multicultural marriage

INTERVIEWED BY JAMES PHAM ☺ ILLUSTRATIONS BY DAVID PERRY

MARRIAGE IS HARD. Add to that the strains of a different language, culture and family values, and it becomes downright imposing. Sometimes you don't know whether to laugh or cry.

One man who has firmly chosen to laugh is cartoonist David Perry, who has found a catharsis of sorts through his humorous, often self-deprecating comics detailing the highs and lows of a multicultural marriage with his wife, Jenny, in his recently self-published book, Vietnamese Wife, Western Husband Club. A man of diverse interests, when he's not drawing, David can be found conducting training for the New York City Department of Parks and Recreation or leading Audubon Society family birding walks on Sundays.

HOW DID YOU GET INTO CARTOONING?

DP: As a kid, I was always drawn to birdwatching and drawing. I was always torn between those two. They're not exactly opposites but different enough that pursuing one would mean neglecting the other. The state school I went to didn't have a great art program so I got a degree in Ecology and Evolution. But it was too much science, so when I needed a break from school, I started doing my own comic books. I see things in my head as animated cartoons, so I became an intern at an animation studio, doing it the old fashioned way with a whole lot of drawings. The whole industry started to tank, which kind of left me with not a whole lot. But as soon as Jenny was in my life, it was natural for me to start cartooning about.

YOUR BOOK IS REFRESHINGLY HONEST IN MANY WAYS,

INCLUDING JENNY'S DESCRIPTION OF THE FIRST TIME YOU MET FACE TO FACE, WHERE SHE WRITES, "HE LOOKED BETTER IN HIS PHOTOS AND FOR SOME REASON I THOUGHT HE WAS TALL." HOW DID YOU TWO MEET?

DP: I loved her when I first saw a photo of her. Literally. That was way back, after I had taken a tour to Vietnam with my family. I was trying to find my tour guide's contact info and ended up being put in contact with Jenny [who was working for a travel company in Vietnam]. She said, "Hey, I'm coming to New York. Is there anything I should go see while I'm there?" and we started to hang out [online]. "Oh, just so you know what I look like", she sent me a gorgeous picture and we started Skyping. Jenny thought I was really photogenic, but at the airport, I'm like: "WOW, there she is!" And she's like: "Oh boy, this guy's not my type." [laughs]

IN THE PREFACE, YOUR WIFE SAYS YOU MUST HAVE BEEN VIETNAMESE IN A PREVIOUS LIFE. WHAT DO YOU SAY TO THAT?

DP: Most Americans are really tall. I'm like the perfect body plan of a Vietnamese guy. I'm 5'8" and kind of on the skinny side. When I went [to Vietnam] to live with Jenny and her parents, I just really seemed to fit in... just like part of the family. Also, I'm really not a typical American at all, I'm more laid back, not your typical New Yorker. I love Asian food. Most Americans can't even eat a whole fish; they have to have everything processed.

AFTER LIVING IN VIETNAM FOR A TIME, YOU BOTH MOVED BACK TO THE US. IS THAT WHEN THE IDEA FOR THE BOOK ORIGINATED?

DP: When I was in Vietnam, there were some online forums that were really popular with Vietnamese girls, but basically it was a Vietnamese wife/Western husband club. I think the girls just needed an excuse to hang out together at a restaurant and I think they kind of assumed that if they brought their husbands along, we would have just as much fun as they were having. The women went crazy, having so much in common, but the men were so different. If we had any other choice, we wouldn't be hanging out together. It was a case of someone thinking you have "yellow fever" and I'm thinking they have "yellow fever." [laughs]

We were all so different that for the most part it was largely awkward. But the one thing we could talk about was our wives. Once I brought it up, everyone else said, "Oh my God! My wife is exactly the same way!"

In the US, [at similar couples get-togethers], I started bringing my sketch book. I'd talk about certain situations with Jenny, confirming whether this was happening to someone else and every time, it was exactly the same story — the way Westerners were trying to comprehend something, having the same reactions.

THERE SEEMS TO BE A LOT OF TRUTH BEHIND THE COMICS —

David & Jenny

SOME YELLING, SOME CRYING, SOME FRUSTRATION, MAYBE... IS IT CATHARTIC FOR YOU TO BE ABLE TO CONVEY THAT?

[Jenny pipes in.] He exaggerates a lot. It's not all real.

[Back to David.] I try to show in my cartoons that there's always love no matter what. Yes, we're frustrated, we have misunderstandings, but there's always a lot of love in the room.

Like Jenny's iPhone has become its own character. It's not really a Vietnamese thing; it's a couples thing. But there are some things that Jenny kind of makes her own. You're not meant to text someone for four hours straight!

THE BOOK INCORPORATES SOME FUNNY WEB TRANSLATION. WHY DID YOU CHOOSE TO DO THAT?

DP: It's to make it funny but it's also another truth. [Vietnamese wives] are always on Facebook and forums, and we have no idea what's going on. Every guy is going to go to Facebook and use its translation feature. Why is she getting so many likes? Is she talking about me? A lot of these translations are just hilarious by their own right.

WAS THERE ANY CONSIDERATION TO MAYBE

LEAVING CERTAIN TOPICS OUT BECAUSE IT MAY MAKE SOMEONE LOOK BAD? OR DENOTE IT'S NOT A PERFECT MARRIAGE?

DP: Not really. I try to have it even — what Vietnamese do when they're in the US and what expats do when they're in Vietnam. The wives actually seem to like it more, spreading this stuff around. It seems that when they see [comics of] Jenny, they're like: "I get it. I'm totally like that."

There are also some men/women stereotypes in Vietnam. Vietnamese women have a reputation as being the perfect wife, and husbands don't do anything. Now that things are modernizing, the roles switching — sometimes they're even, sometimes reversed. Jenny saw her own parents — her mother working so hard, her father, and I love the guy, but he does a lot of lounging...

WITH A TITLE LIKE "THE VIETNAMESE WIFE, WESTERN HUSBAND CLUB," DO YOU FEEL THE BOOK MAY BE TOO NICHE?

DP: I think that people from Vietnam relate to it more. It's really not a Western genre at all. Most Westerners who have no association with Asian culture at all, which is most, won't even get it. Americans are set in their ways that their culture is the right way and everyone else is kind of stupid. So you have to be well-traveled enough to get it. I use some mixed Vietnamese language and a bit of introduction to Vietnamese in the book. [O: There are additional comments in the book to provide context for those who may not understand a comic.]

It's a narrow niche, but people within that niche really love it. Jenny is really popular and has a lot of friends/followers. I'd work hard on something and have like two people see my video, meanwhile she'd change her profile pic and hundreds of people would comment on her new haircut. So she's been a really good source for a fan base. Also, since posting a cartoon on the "Another Side of Vietnam" Facebook page, my blog popularity has grown at least 10 times.

DO YOU HAVE ANY PLANS FOR MORE BOOKS?

DP: Since I have a lot of fans now in Vietnam and a lot of people who want to have a translation, I'm thinking of going back to Vietnam and getting a publisher, and starting a new book with more cartoons and comments in Vietnamese.

Romantic landscapes for newlyweds or those looking to get hitched

FOR TRAVEL-LOVERS, a honeymoon or wedding is the perfect opportunity to build the ideal trip. Whether you're after a 'fly and flop' sort of honeymoon recovery or a once in a lifetime wedding, we explore some of the tempting destinations here in Vietnam.

Dalat is the destination of choice for honeymooners. Smiling young couples drift across Xuan Huong Lake in paddle boats shaped like giant swans, while brides in flowing white dresses clamber aboard ponies and pose for photos. Romance is also in the air at the city's various flower gardens, including an amazing orchid garden where visitors can see rare blue orchids. More utilitarian but equally colorful is the town's central market, overflowing with fresh cut flowers and an incredible variety of fruits and vegetables. No matter when you visit, spring will be in the air.

Ancient Hoi An is located 30 km south of Danang. Hoi An used to be an international trade center in the 16th and 17th centuries. Though this small town is very popular for summer holidays, it is also one of the most ideal and romantic place for honeymooners.

Relax on the beach, enjoy spas, wander through small streets or go cycling to discover the rural area or just join in a cooking class to experience the local culture, which will make your honeymoon the trip of a lifetime.

LAKESIDE LAVISH

Overlooking Dalat's Tuyen Lam lake and gently undulating hills, Dalat Edensee Lake Resort & Spa is a taste of Europe in Asia, providing a stunning backdrop for a glamorous wedding or blissful honeymoon.

Eden Palace, the property's main building, is a gorgeous 7,000 m² space lit by opulent chandeliers for an Old World feel. For the perfect wedding, look no further than the Baroness, a 550 m² grand Event Hall, illuminated by natural light and conveniently adjoining the Panorama Rooftop Terrace. For a totally stress-free wedding, let Edensee look after all the details of your special day from fresh flowers and an MC and band to the confetti and stage, culminating in a champagne pyramid and of course, a decadent cake to remember.

After the most special of days, honeymooning couples can choose from amongst Edensee's three room categories, all spacious balconies offering sweeping mountain and/or lake views. Or splurge on the VIP Villa, the ultimate opulence, surrounded by lush greenery and set directly by the serene emerald waters of Tuyen Lam Lake.

For 2014, Edensee has put together a Honeymoon Package for the ages at just VND7,500,000 (exclusive of taxes and service charge) per couple which includes:

- Two-night stay in a Deluxe Lake View Room
- Daily full pension (breakfast, lunch & dinner)
- Daily full body massage for two in a VIP room
- Complimentary sports & activities at the resort
- Daily in-room fresh flowers and fruit
- Complimentary transportation to / from Dalat City

Lamb chops

Bonjour, Come in!

Hearty French fare in an alfresco setting in District 2

TEXT BY JULIAN AJELLO IMAGES BY NGOC TRAN

TUCKED AWAY ON a side street off Thao Dien in District 2 lies a French restaurant named Le Bacoulous (13 Tong Huu Dinh, D2). Don't bother to run it through Google Translate, for the word itself has no meaning, invented by the owner. To get the story behind the genesis of this year-old eatery's moniker it's best to chat with the owner, Frenchman David Genouin-Duhamel. While you're at it, don't be shy to ask for recommendations, as he is responsible for crafting the entire menu himself.

Originally from Normandy, David fell in love with gastronomy and the culinary arts, as the French are wont to do, while living in Paris. However, he took the plunge into owning his own French restaurants when he found himself living in Phuket, Thailand, for over a decade. Phuket's loss is Saigon's gain.

Le Bacoulous may serve French food, but the atmosphere feels more like antebellum Vietnam. You won't find white linens, expensive crystal, or decadent décor here. Instead you'll dine alfresco on simple wooden tables with wicker chairs, surrounded by lush tropical plants and ambient music that's a pleasant accompaniment during your meal. If you relish the idea of a bistro in the tropical outdoors, you'll feel right at home at Le Bacoulous.

The menu has more than a few options spread over a variety of categories. The starters were no exception with myriad selections to satisfy most palates. We opened with baked scallops in garlic butter (VND110,000), a straightforward dish, but a great measuring stick. Small and tender, they were exactly as they should be, and served with fresh bread to make sure none of the garlic elixir was wasted.

The Food

Our other starter, the salade gourmet in a nut vinaigrette, was comprised of duck confit, duck gizzard, and bacon mixed with baby greens and topped off with a poached egg (VND180,000), and proved to be a real showstopper. The duck confit was crispy and salty on the outside while the meat remained tender and moist, falling off the bone effortlessly. The gizzards, whose texture was more akin to sausage than organ meat, were delectable little gems, and bacon makes everything better. This starter could very well be a finisher for those who don't have a huge appetite, or simply forgot to bring it.

Our desire for meat dictated the mains. We settled on an order of New Zealand lamb chops in herbs and served with ratatouille (VND250,000 for two chops, VND320,000 for three) and the flank steak topped with shallots and served with a baby green salad and mashed potatoes (VND260,000). Several other sides are available should you prefer them.

The lamb chops were ordered rare and didn't disappoint. Served alongside a generous portion of ratatouille, sliced

TOP TO BOTTOM: Flank steak, duck confit, lemongrass sorbet

"The flank steak was succulent and wonderfully textured. The generous portion of fried shallots heaped an extra, savory level atop it. After the first bite you'll be ready to order another glass of the house red" cherry tomatoes were sprinkled generously on top. The herb flavoring was distinct, but not overpowering, and proved delicious even for those who prefer their meats naked. The meat itself was tender and the gamey flavor that is often present in lamb was mild to non-existent. The chops were of sufficient size that two should be enough for most people, but the hearty eater, or people who enjoy sharing, can feel good opting for a third.

The star of our meal, however, was the flank steak. Also from New Zealand, David recommended it with such confidence that we didn't bother asking about the other dishes on the menu that caught our attention. We ordered it very rare, emphasis on 'very.' Most kitchens seem apprehensive about serving red meat purple and tepid in the middle. If that's how you prefer your steak, Le Bacoulos' chef will not let you down. The flank steak was succulent and wonderfully textured. The generous portion of fried shallots heaped an extra, savory level atop it. After the first bite you'll be ready to order another glass of the house red (VND50,000). Our choice of sides, mashed potatoes, also ordered on the recommendation of our host, were buttery, creamy, and the ideal complement.

You'll need to catch your breath after a meal like that before braving the dessert menu. The chocolate mousse (VND90,000) was set squarely in our sights, but our host wouldn't hear of us not sampling the lemongrass sorbet in strawberry sauce (VND90,000) as well. The mousse was rich and possessed of a delicate, airy texture that is its signature trait. The sorbet was refreshing, tart, and, once again, spot on as a recommendation. They were an absolute joy to eat, and we lamented finishing them.

For those who enjoy a more festive atmosphere, every other Saturday night they have live music that alternates between jazz manouche (aka gypsy jazz) and reggae. ■

The Puppet Master

An evening of surprises at Lang Viet

TEXT BY JAMES PHAM IMAGES BY NGOC TRAN

FEW WORDS HAVE the ability to strike true fear in the hearts of gourmands everywhere like “dinner theater.” That simple phrase conjures up images of overly smiling performers finishing up a scene as one of the Von Trapp children just in time to don an apron and serve up a limp salad to a roomful of blue-haired early birds - a concept long on promise but all too often, short on delivery.

So it was with some apprehension that I set out to Lang Viet (36 Pham Ngoc Thanh, D3), a restaurant cum water puppet theater, known mostly to tour groups and travel agencies. Cue eye roll and involuntary shudder. What I found, though, was a night of surprises.

Open for just over a year now, Lang Viet is the brainchild of Le Ba Khang, born in Vietnam’s Central Highlands to a northerner father and a southerner mother. His vision in opening up the spacious 300-seat restaurant with an impressively well-designed theater featuring 150 stadium-style seats was to blend culture and food, traditional water puppetry and authentic Vietnamese cuisine.

“Preserve and promote” would be an apt slogan for the restaurant, applying both to the show and the food.

A remodeled villa housing indoor and outdoor seating, Lang Viet, meaning “Vietnamese village,” aims to be all things to all people, an extravaganza of everything Vietnam, from the recreated village gate at the entrance to the stone statues in the landscaped courtyard to the intricate woodwork adorning the property, all to the tune of a whopping VND10 billion in renovations. The décor is “95 percent Vietnamese,” says Khang, as he waves his hand over the Dalat wine bottles used as flower vases, one of the surprisingly few kitschy elements in the otherwise elegant space.

Khang’s obvious enthusiasm for showcasing Vietnam finds its truest form, though, in water puppets, an art form that grew out of traditional water games in the Red River Delta. One of only three places in Saigon to feature water puppetry (the other two being The Golden Dragon Water Puppet Theater and at the National Museum of Vietnamese History by the Saigon Zoo), the 45-minute show (an optional VND150,000 add-on to dinner, show times are 5pm and 6:15pm) is endearingly whimsical and somehow manages to avoid the drawn out narration and screechy soundtrack commonly associated with any faux cultural shows aimed at tourists. Save for a badly translated pamphlet, the six musicians (with one particularly adept at making sound effects) and nine puppeteers are thankfully left on their own to perform a dozen or so folksy vignettes highlighting countryside activities and myths with surprisingly elaborate effects. The puppeteers, who train for up to two years, guide the wooden puppets using 1.8m rods, recreating realistic movements, from the craning of a phoenix’s neck and the shaking of its tail feathers to the undulating body of a boy swimming after a wayward duck. However, the true beauty of water puppetry is found in what you don’t see – the performers standing in chest deep water, hidden behind a curtain,

TOP TO BOTTOM: Hue style fig salad, Crispy morning glory with shrimp and mango, West Lake style shrimp toast and the mechanics of the puppets, hidden under the water's surface.

"Even though we never actually touch them, the puppets reflect the mood of the puppeteer. If you're happy or sad, it shows in the way the puppets move. This is truly art. Otherwise, it's like a movie that you might as well watch on DVD," says Hai, one of the lead puppeteers, with more than 20 years of the craft behind him.

Build It, They Will Come

While the dinner service mainly draws in tourists, Khang's aim is really to introduce water puppetry to local Vietnamese.

"Probably two of ten Vietnamese will have actually seen water puppetry somewhere other than on YouTube or at the zoo," he says. "It's a shame because it's one of the few things that is uniquely Vietnamese. But if I build it, they will come."

The night's final surprise begins with the post-show dinner. While there is an à la carte menu, Lang Viet is hoping to mimic the success of elevated street food places like Nha Hang Ngon with its strangely named "Calling Buffet" (VND350,000+), a selection of 27 generously portioned dishes from all over Vietnam. Diners are able to order as many dishes as they want, with the waiters trained to give recommendations. Travelers to the North will recognize the very competent versions of Nem cua be Hai Phong (crab-filled spring rolls) or the Banh tom Tay Ho, the ubiquitous shrimp toast (here made with a sweet potato base) served all around Hanoi's West Lake. Foodies will be excited to find some dishes less common to foreigners, like the Rau luoc kho quet, boiled vegetables dipped in a reduced sweet / salty fish sauce, originally a dish born of economic hardship, and the Goi trai va, an addictive savory / sweet Hue specialty made from fresh figs, sate, shrimp paste and beef. The ambitious but consistently good menu also has some twists on the norm. The Goi rau muong chien gion xoai tom features an unexpected texture in the lightly fried morning glory leaves, almost tempura style, topped with julienned mango and whole shrimp, tossed in a refreshingly citrusy sauce of caramelized palm sugar and freshly squeezed kumquats. Another standout was the Tom cuon ba chi hun khoi, bacon-wrapped grilled shrimp on a bed of mango soaked in a passion fruit coulis.

While perhaps the puppet show isn't something you'd want to watch again and again, Lang Viet, as a restaurant, certainly stands on its own merits and deserves a wider audience than simply tourists. Come for the kitsch, stay for the food. ■

Nusa Lembongan

Island Life

Nusa Lembongan, a small island between Bali and Nusa Penida in Badung Strait, is the perfect holiday hideaway with few visitors and pristine unspoilt beaches

TEXT BY STEPHENIE HARRISON IMAGES BY TONY KUEHN

IN ALL HIS WISDOM, the Buddha once counseled, "It is better to travel well than to arrive."

Gazing out across the roiling waters of the Bali Sea where the tip of a slowly sinking ferry boat bobs beneath a tide of crashing waves, I am beginning to wonder whether I might not live long enough to experience either of those things.

A 60 kilometer swath of water known as the Bandung Strait separates Bali, Indonesia from a cluster of three islands known collectively as Pulau Penida. It is one of the most turbulent passages in the region, and the journey is made all the more perilous by the relatively dubious safety records of Indonesian ferries, which do little to inspire confidence in their passengers even in the most serene sailing conditions.

But boats are the only means of reaching this trio of islands, and perhaps it is this nautical gauntlet that every traveler must face to ensure that on the other side paradise still awaits. With no cars, no Western chains, spotty Wi-Fi, and sometimes even no electricity, a voyage across the strait is said to be like traveling back in time, to the glory days of Bali 20 years ago.

From largest to smallest, the islands that beckon across the water are Nusa Penida, Nusa Lembongan, and Nusa Ceningan. All have their charms, but I am like the fabled Goldilocks, fixated on the mid-sized Lembongan. It is the most developed and visited of the three – boasting everything from mangrove forests and fishing villages to Balinese temples and killer surf breaks, it seems to have a little something for everyone. The consensus is that Lembongan is neither too big nor too small, not too busy or too quiet, but just right. It sounds like perfection, but watching as the boat offshore finally slips to a watery grave, it's hard to shake the sense that this is anything but a terrible omen.

The following day breaks with the sorbet hues of dawn punching through dollops of cloud as the sky swiftly shifts from warm to cool tones that match the surface of the sea. Rumor has it that the crossing is calmer earlier in the day, and I am first in line to buy tickets for the public boat that will ferry us across. I have heard horror stories of boats being dangerously overcrowded and overloaded, of passengers sharing the space with all manner of livestock for the 90-minute crossing, so I'm relieved to find that when we cast off, there are only a handful of other passengers and plenty of room to spare.

Although initially placid, about an hour into our journey the water turns choppy and hostile. Massive waves tear themselves from the sea and batter angrily against the sides of the boat. Our captain does his best to steer the doddering craft around the swells, but even still, we are tossed about like rag dolls on a rollercoaster. It never feels as though we are in danger — the crew is unflappably nonchalant, suggesting these conditions are nothing to worry about — but just the same, I'm glad I caught the early boat. I'd hate to be out here when the weather is actually a concern.

As Nusa Lembongan finally glides into view, all cares and worries disappear. Watching as the frothing waves crash against the rocky southwestern coastline and families frolic on the soft powdered sand of pristine beaches, I know the journey has been worth it. Salty splashes of chilly seawater against my cheeks and forehead assure me this is not a mirage and, with shrieks of laughter ringing in the air as groups are zipped along on banana boats, I smile with happiness. When I tear my eyes from the island before me, I note that every single person on the boat shares my look of satisfaction.

Diving In Feet First

Although Nusa Lembongan is far from undiscovered, it is still more untouched than not. Most of the boats lining the main beach are used for fishing or diving, and as there is no dock, visitors must splash knee deep in the water and make their way to shore on foot. From there, it's a quick walk across silky sand to the main road (effectively the island's only road), which circumscribes Lembongan like a crooked halo. Lining its length along the western side of the island are a handful of casual eateries (warungs) where locals and visitors dine side-by-side, charming homestays set within traditional Balinese courtyard complexes, and plenty of dive and surf shops. Noticeably absent? Any kind of bars or clubs — Lembongan is fiercely protective of its laidback, low-key island vibe and prides itself on its complete lack of nightlife. Evenings are spent on the beach (or beachside restaurants) watching the sun burn low in the sky, sipping a few cold beers and tucking into some fresh caught seafood; if you're lucky, you'll dine on grilled tuna dipped in a potent sambal made of chili, shallots and lime. Every morning, the head of my host family sets out in his boat to catch the family's supper; every evening, I return from my adventures to find they have saved me my own massive fish, while the family of five shares one of comparable size. I protest their generosity, but they are resolute and I never go to bed hungry. Come 10pm, the last of the lights are out and the only sound is the crashing of the waves until morning is heralded by the crowing of the neighborhood roosters.

I spend my first days on Lembongan diving — apart from surfing, it's the island's primary tourist attraction. Ironically, the influx of cold water that makes the journey here so tempestuous is one of the main things that makes the voyage worthwhile: the confluence of warm and cool waters also brings brilliant marine life. Smack-dab in the middle of what is known as the Coral Triangle, Lembongan offers some of the best diving and the greatest biodiversity in the world. I am lucky enough to be here during prime mola mola season; also known as ocean sunfish, these creatures can weigh up to 1,000kg and can reach up to three meters in height. Despite their size, they are notoriously elusive and although I brave the chilly waters seven times and gaze upon the graceful glide of manta rays and the curious courtship of cuttlefish (not to mention the hundreds of other beautiful

"I am hypnotized, my mind reeling as I attempt to categorize every shade of blue of the water before me. Azure, cerulean, aquamarine, sapphire... I run out of adjectives long before the bay runs out of chromatic shifts to dazzle me" creatures that dwell beneath the waves), I never spot these beautiful behemoths. A disappointment, certainly, but I still count the diving here some of the best I have experienced in Asia.

Encouraged by the beauty found underwater, I am pleased to find that exploring Lembongan by land is rewarding in its own right as well. At eight square kilometers, the island is sufficiently compact that it doesn't take much time or effort to get around, but is just big enough that to fully explore, walking isn't really an option. The ring road is paved, and although riddled with potholes, it makes for an unchallenging ride on a motorbike, which can be easily rented from any guesthouse for about USD6 a day (helmet included).

Cliffhangers

One of the joys of Lembongan is that it's impossible to get lost, so there's no need for a map. Puttering down the main strip, I do a lazy clockwise loop of the island, a tour that shows me the many sides to life here that make Lembongan so special. Starting in Jugut Batu, the busiest section of the island, I zip past traditional homes with smoldering sticks of incense and colorful floral offerings for the gods laid on their doorsteps. Rounding a bend in the road, I leave the village behind me, faced instead with ramshackle huts on quiet beaches where locals wade out waist deep to harvest seaweed. Sarongs dripping and arms laden with hanks of algae, they lay their bounty out to dry. It may not be glamorous work, but this is the island's primary industry — these precious bundles are richly prized ingredients for the Asian cosmetics industry — and it is this humble commodity, rather than tourist dollars, that keeps the island afloat.

Pushing on down a sandy stretch, I reach the edges of a dense mangrove forest that can only be toured in a rickety little dinghy whose seaworthiness seems questionable. Instead, I return to the ring road and ride through dense woods passing a little yellow bridge that connects Lembongan to its tinier sibling, Ceningan. For those feeling a bit stir-crazy, Ceningan is a popular diversion, famed locally as it is for its surf spots, sunsets and — for the truly daring — some epic cliffs from which adrenaline junkies vault into the deep blue. Alas, the bridge is under much-needed construction and smartly closed to all traffic, so rather than testing my mortality, I continue down the road to Mushroom Bay and the spectacular Sunset Beach. As the surf crashes against the rocky cliffs and the icy froth sluices across the pearly white sand of the beach, I am hypnotized, my mind reeling as I attempt to categorize every shade of blue of the water before me. Azure, cerulean, aquamarine, sapphire... I run out of adjectives long before the bay runs out of chromatic shifts to dazzle me.

The beauty of this spot paralyzes me. I am so reluctant to leave it, that I splurge for lunch at one of Lembongan's few upscale resorts, The Beach Club at Sandy Bay, indulging in a duck and boudin noir sandwich perfectly complemented with soft slices of apple and sprigs of fresh thyme. This is about as far from the local fare as one can get, but one cannot live on grilled fish and rice alone. My meal is accompanied only by the susurru of the waves, the soundtrack of paradise.

Afterwards, I work off my decadent meal by walking down the beach and scrabbling over the jagged rocks to visit the Devil's Tear, one of the island's most famous geographical attractions. Years of turbulent tides have worn away a small cauldron in the wall of rock, forming a dramatic outcropping where the water churns and swirls with violence. Occasionally a blast of spray bursts upwards, forcing a shimmering rainbow to briefly sparkle in the mist. It is the perfect place to sit for a few hours, marvel at the power and perfection of nature, while the sun dips in the sky. Even with a scattering of clouds hanging low on the horizon, it's clear how Sunset Beach got its name.

Most of my days on the island follow a similar pattern — there's not much else to do than to slowly explore the nooks and crannies of the island, inevitably returning to this spot as dusk settles in and afternoon slides into evening. I only intend to spend a handful of days here, but I find myself reluctant to leave and wind up extending my stay to a week and then again until 10 days have passed, much of them the same, but peaceful and happy nonetheless. Truthfully, Lembongan is the kind of place where it's easy to fall into a routine, to while away the days doing not much of anything but simply soaking in the surroundings and it's easy to understand how people get sucked in and stay far longer than intended.

A question hangs in the air as to just how long the island can preserve its sleepy ways, and there is some sense that travelers

"Truthfully, Lembongan is the kind of place where it's easy to fall into a routine, to while away the days doing not much of anything but simply soaking in the surroundings and it's easy to understand how people get sucked in and stay far longer than intended"

should enjoy it while they can before it follows in Bali's footsteps or is overrun like the better-known Gilli islands that float off the coast of Lombok. If that day should come, it will be a sad one indeed. For now, however, it's nice to know that on Lembongan, a paradise long thought lost can still be found. ■

This Country Life

IMAGES BY QUINN RYAN MATTINGLY

Vietnam is still a highly agrarian society with eighty percent of the population living in rural villages scattered throughout the lowlands of Chau Doc, the mountainous areas in Dalat and the coastal line running along Hoi An. The countryside is filled with bamboo-hedged villages, beautiful patchworks of green paddies, hard-working farmers in their conical hats, and water buffaloes. They live in a small community with a temple or a communal cultural house where great events, such as festivals worshipping the village god and traditional games are organized. Unlike life in the countryside which is often considered to be simple and traditional, life in the city is modern and complicated. ■

Luggage 101

Picking out the best bag for you

THERE'S A POINT in the Confessions of a Shopaholic series where Rebecca Bloomwood has an epiphany in the luggage department. "Luggage! Why have I never thought of luggage?" she screams, gleeful to discover a whole new world of things to buy. As somewhat of a hyper traveler, I've been in love with luggage ever since I got my first passport.

Walking back to my hotel in Tokyo's Asakusa neighborhood a few months ago, I passed by a sign for "The World Bags and Luggage Museum." How had I never heard of this? Intrigued, I entered the non-descript office building and was shown to the 7th floor to find what turned out to be hundreds of bags, the personal collection of Ryusaku Shinkawa, the founder of ACE, a Japanese luggage manufacturer. There were Louis Vuitton steamer trunks designed to float in case of emergency, rounded cases from the Wild West days (rounded to avoid rain penetration when traveling by open coach, and later so that they'd have to be stacked on top of trunks, thereby receiving less wear and tear), gorgeous Italian leather bags from the 1960s and even an old school Pan Am shoulder bag — in short, a history of travel presented through luggage.

Seeing a display showing the dozens of pieces that go into making a modern-day suitcase proved the impetus for this month's column: basic factors to consider when choosing your next piece of luggage.

Having visited nearly 60 countries as a travel writer and award-winning photographer, James Pham blogs about his adventures at FlylcarusFly.com

Soft vs. Hard

For a recent around-the-world trip, I bought a beautiful piece of hard-sided luggage. It survived impossibly crowded trams in Istanbul, unforgiving train station stairwells in Rome and uneven pavement in the Caribbean. I loved knowing that my fragile souvenirs were safely tucked away and that the latches were much harder to open than vulnerable zippers (search for "zipper+suitcase+pen" on YouTube to see how frighteningly easy it is to open and re-close a locked, zipped suitcase with just a ballpoint pen). Unfortunately, on the very last leg of my trip, the hard plastic shell got cracked on the bottom which I sadly did not notice until a month later, making it impossible to seek compensation from the offending airline. It's now a very expensive way to store my winter clothes. For now, I'm sticking with abrasion-proof ballistic nylon, which turns out is the trend for Asian travelers. Tom Nelson of TUMI (Asia Pacific), a manufacturer of luxury luggage, talked to Oi on the differences between Asian and Western consumers: "It is interesting to note that hard-sided travel cases were traditionally very popular in this region [of Asia]. However, we are now seeing a bit of a shift where Asian consumers are increasingly opting to purchase soft-sided travel cases. Business and day bags are very popular in Asia. Male consumers in Asia particularly like the messenger and cross carry style totes. Comparatively, men in the US, from what we have seen, prefer to carry backpacks."

Two or Four Wheels?

Wheels have seen lots of improvements in the past few years, including bigger, more stable ones to what Tom describes as wheels "recessed into the body of the case to give it a lower center of gravity for stable multidirectional navigation and a more spacious interior compared to mounted wheels."

Personally, I look for sturdy spinner models (four wheels) for both carry-on and check-in which has saved my back / shoulder countless times when having to manage two big cases and a carry-on. With increasing fees for checked bags, both my travel backpacks are wheeled which makes them easier to overpack (but less likely to attract the attention of overzealous gate agents) but a breeze to move.

Design Aesthetics

While unusually shaped bags are cool, bags which are more rectangular (as opposed to having rounded edges) offer maximum space. Think also about getting a bag with a unique design or color. In a 2009 bust, police captured a US couple who had stolen almost 1,000 bags from a nearby airport, most of the bags black or dark in color with no identifying marks. If a thief is caught with a non-descript bag, it's easier to say he mistook it for his own. But with everyone from high-performance vehicle manufacturers like Ducati and McLaren to fashion designer Alexander McQueen and home designer Jonathan Adler joining the luggage game, there's no reason to be resigned to basic black.

For frequent travelers, there's even more innovation on the horizon, either already for sale or in prototype, including suitcases that morph into kickboard-style scooters, strollers or seats (or all three!), self-weigh or have motorized wheels. Traveling has never been so fun! ■

An Imperial Sojourn

They say it always rains in Hue

ILLUSTRATION BY BRIDGET MARCH

IT WAS THE END of the rainy season in Quang Nam, and a weekend break was needed after seemingly months of cold, damp weather. We were suffering from cabin fever and wondering how on earth it can feel like 10 degrees Celsius when it was actually 20? Coming from the UK, I am used to endless winters and dark, damp days but how can it feel like England in winter when I am so close to the equator? Answers on a postcard please...

We jumped on the train to Hue and began to trundle northward. The scenery was breathtaking. The single train track hugs the coastline along a shelf carved out of the mountain, which rises up to our left and spills down into the sea to our right.

Deep shaded ravines and sunny headlands of jungle meet the glistening blue East Sea. Way down below, if you press your nose against the window, you can see coves with pearly white sand that have never known human footprint. So romantic.

We pass little hill stations where local trains take villagers and goods to the market. Some girls come aboard with dried squid for sale. It's a favorite snack with cold beer. Men inspect the wares and spirited bargaining begins. When the guard comes down the train, the girls hide their squid and feign sleep until he passes by.

At last we arrive in Hue and step out into the main street. Instantly, there is a feeling of elegance, education and the kind of confidence that envelopes you in the streets of ancient cities. I like it very much. We walk the full length of the town to our hotel and view the haunting fortifications of the citadel on the other side of the mysterious Perfume River. It wasn't raining.

We hired bicycles and toured the inside of the perimeter wall of the citadel. This was one of the most delightful days I have ever spent in Vietnam. These walls enclose a small town where all aspects of life take place. The fortifications are so thick that people build their homes on top and plant vegetable gardens too. Each dwelling has a brightly painted shrine outside (or three, or four, or five) and all the gateways have been newly painted for Tet. Showy gateways are de rigueur in this town but many of them, though fit for a mansion, adorn simple one room old houses!

Everyone says "hello" as we cycle by. We stop to let a couple of promenading cows pass. I find an excellent example of craft mosaic adorning the gates of a temple along the way. The broken porcelain and pottery is interspersed with different colors of glass that catch the sun. I stop to take too many photos and ask some lunching women about its history. It's only five years old I'm told. I am astonished that this craft is alive and flourishing.

For the rest of our trip it rained. It rained and then rained some more. The light was subdued but the colors of paint on the old citadel gateways, the red lacquer and gold leaf of the restored halls and temples of the purple city were still electrifying and evocative of a bygone age of color and glory.

Whatever the weather, the history of Hue seems to seep out of the stones and the woodwork to linger in the mists of the Perfume River. As an artist, I found it to be a powerful and moving experience. ■

MY LIFE AS... a wedding planner

INTERVIEWED BY NGUYEN THUY TRANG, LENA TRAN, MAYA WEIR, VU THU HIEN IMAGES BY NGOC TRAN

EVEN THOUGH I'VE already planned so many weddings, it's only now that I'm starting to think about my own wedding. Being a wedding planner is quite stressful; it's a happy day for the people having the wedding, but such a busy day for us. I can't wait for it to be my day to experience the happiness and not be stressed about the details!

My name is Hai. I'm turning 25 this year. I'm in charge of event planning and organizing, mainly weddings at VCCI Expo (an exhibition center belonging to the Vietnam Chamber of Commerce and Industry). The way I chose this job is pretty random. When people ask, I usually tell them, "I didn't find it, it found me." But thanks to this job, I get to have parties every day without paying a single cent.

Anyway, if you want to have an idea of the kind of pressure I face as a wedding planner, you're going to have to understand all the tasks I'm in charge of every day. These days I manage a staff of 120 from various departments. I arrive at the office at 8 in the morning, and the first thing I do is check the work schedule on the notice board. Then at 8:30, I have a meeting with all the personnel to divide up everything that needs to be done that day. At the end of the meeting, I go back to my office and make a list of my own tasks. At 10am, I visit the wedding location to see how preparations are proceeding. This includes checking the list of all the equipment we need for the ceremony and contacting the caterers. By around 10:30, the staff begins arranging the tables and chairs and decorating the entrance gates and the main stage. Then I have to run around a lot to check up on their progress and remind people of any special details.

As you can see, even just the morning is already stressful in my field of work. But then again, there are some days that are more stressful than others. It really depends on how many weddings we're setting up that day. On average, I'm usually in charge of managing two weddings per day. But during the high season, we may have to organize as many as six weddings in one day. And if it's a 'lucky' year, the demand can be even higher because people believe holding weddings in those years will bring them good fortune and happiness.

There's Money in Marriages

The wedding industry is very profitable. Let me break it down for you; right now we have three large banquet halls where we can hold weddings simultaneously. The cost of renting a banquet hall is anywhere between VND15 and VND25 million, depending on the time of the year and how hard the couple bargains. Then, on average, each couple will order 100 food trays, but we can serve up to a maximum of 600 food trays per hall. A tray for ten people ranges from VND1.2 to 1.5 million. Of course, the price will be higher if the customers have any special requests. Because each wedding takes place in a relatively short time, only about one to two hours, there aren't many expensive activities for each wedding besides the food and music. The customers can request us to hire singers or if they want to sing themselves, we'll prepare a band or emcee for them. The truth is we make a pretty serious profit from each wedding.

To be able to do this job well it's really important to be good at improvising.

"It's really important to be good at improvising. You have to deal with a whole range of situations as quickly and effectively as possible. If you don't, you can have real problems"

You have to deal with a whole range of situations as quickly and effectively as possible. If you don't, you can have real problems. I remember one time when one of our employees beat up the stage supervisor for something he'd done. You see, with all the work they have to do and the short amount of time they've got to do it in, people can get frustrated easily. If you don't know how to deal with people and their craziness, you won't be able to get anything done. Aside from the ability to deal with people's craziness, my other key skills are organizing, planning, and delegating. It's still hard to get training in these sorts of skills in Vietnam, so mainly I had to gain them myself through experience.

Have there been any big changes since I've been working as a wedding planner? The only one I can think of is the banning of firecrackers. It's kind of funny because people immediately adapted by switching to popping balloons on stage instead. I guess they figured it would create the same air of excitement. When we first started doing it, it was pretty basic, we had two kids holding sticks with nails attached to them and they'd poke each balloon individually to make them pop. Now though, we're very high tech, we just pull a string and all the balloons pass over nails attached to the stage. Boom! Boom! Boom!

I remember this one time when three weddings were being held at the same time. The problem was that the walls between the banquet halls weren't soundproofed very well. Normally, the start time of each wedding is slightly different. But that day, all three started at the same time and all three had similar scripts. So you had Western music playing on one side, old Vietnamese music on the other, and karaoke on another, all at the same time. And when the brides were about to be introduced we could hear from all three halls, "Please give a big round of applause to welcome the most beautiful woman of the day." All of us staff standing outside couldn't stop laughing.

I've planned weddings for a lot of my close friends. Those weddings are my favorite because even though there's still stress, it feels more rewarding. But you know, after having planned so many weddings here in the big city, I still prefer weddings in the countryside to be honest. Even though the planning isn't as professional and maybe the food isn't as sanitary, the atmosphere there is always more genuine and full of excitement. Here in Hanoi people come in quickly and leave quickly. But honestly, that's just my opinion. At the end of the day, if the couple is happy, we're happy too.

Results from the first Vietnamese Equestrian Grand Prix

TEXT BY NPD KHANH IMAGES PROVIDED BY BACH MA EQUESTRIAN FARM

ON THE OUTSKIRTS of Saigon in Binh Duong, the first Vietnamese Equestrian Grand Prix debuted last month with little fanfare to an audience of approximately 200 guests. No tickets were sold. All guests were strictly by invitation only. No jubilant announcements on Vietnamese mainstream media. No catchy titles splashed across printed pages and no camera crews and no TV coverage. Despite being a self-proclaimed international standard grand prix, complete with Fédération Equestre Internationale (FEI) judges flown in from Hong Kong and the Philippines and a dedicated Parcour designer, the event was a small and quiet affair. In fact, it may be more appropriate to call it a community gathering than a grand prix.

Despite this, neither the guests nor the contestants seemed to mind. Many even felt this was the best way to approach it.

"In other countries where people are already used to and love horses and horse riding, like Germany for example, an equestrian grand prix can garner audiences in the thousands," says Johny Mak, one of the presiding FEI judges. "I don't know much about Vietnam, but in a country where horses are, for all intents and purposes, still treated and listed as beasts of burden, do you think a sport whose core is the bond between the rider and the horse would ever be a mainstream thing?"

"To be honest, we prefer it like this. It feels private and familiar. It feels like a community. It's a place where we can share our passion for the sport with other lovers of equestrianism. We understand that not everyone is as crazy for horses as we are so it's great to have a place where we can be horse crazy all we want without hindering other people. We may not be 'grand' in size... yet... but we are grand in heart," he adds.

A Partnership

So what exactly is equestrianism?

According to Vittorio, the second FEI judge from the Philippines, equestrianism is, in essence, the partnership between rider and horse. "Mr. Google probably does a better job at explaining what it is than I do. But if you want a more personal take on what it is, then that's mine. Equestrianism can be understood as the composite of various horse riding skills such as jumping or dressage, but it is also more than that."

"It takes anything from five to ten years of constant and dedicated training to become truly proficient. Riders spend only half of that time on horseback, however. The other half is spent on familiarizing yourself with the horse, feeding it, washing it, talking to it, taking care of it, until the point where trust starts to develop from sheer familiarity," Vittorio explains. "The horse is your partner. It's not a machine or a bike that you can push buttons and steer in the right direction. If he doesn't like you, he's not about to let you boss him around or even sit on his back, which is why a lot of new riders often find themselves on the ground. There has to be communication between the rider and horse. There has to be a partnership, and partnership doesn't grow out of thin air. True partnership requires time, commitment and dedication."

The contest itself is comprised of three categories: show jumping, dressage (also called "horse ballet"), and freeform riding.

The end of the two-day contest saw the crowning of the show jumping and dressage champion, who, amazingly, was not only the same person but also a young 14-year-old Vietnamese girl. Over the course of two days, Ngo Hong Ngoc and her equine partner Bakun beat out six other competitors for the trophies.

"I'm overwhelmed," says Ngoc on receiving her two trophies. "I put in a lot of hard work and so did Bakun. It's Bakun who I have to thank." Bakun is one among the 28 horses kept and cared for by the Bach Ma Equestrian Farm, also the host of the contest. They have known each other for only six months.

"Bakun is a very calm, very gentle horse," Ngoc explains. "I think he trains me as much as I train him. Horse riding can be very nerve-wracking at times, so having a partner who is always calm really helps. In the end, just like with other riders and horses, it's our bond that pulls us through to the finish line."

The farm owner says: "We are overwhelmed with the feedback we have received. Two British trainers even offered to train our horses and riders for free in appreciation for our enthusiasm. This first grand prix may be small but because we did everything properly, it is legitimate and recognized by FEI certified judges. This is but the first milestone for us. Eventually, we will have a second grand prix, then a third, and then we will introduce equestrianism to more and more people in Vietnam." ■

Business & Tech

■ IMAGE BY NGOC TRAN

Dear Hadrien,

I have been offered a contract to work as a project manager in Ho Chi Minh City and I will earn a little over USD2,000 per month. However, I heard that in Vietnam all amounts in contracts should be stated in Vietnamese dong. Is that correct? And is my future employer allowed to pay my salary in cash?

A member of the Paris Bar, Hadrien Wolff has been practicing law in Vietnam for more than seven years, currently as a partner of Audier & Partners based at its HCMC office. Having gained extensive legal experience in the Netherlands and Cambodia, Marijn Sprokkereef is an associate at the Hanoi office of the same firm. Audier & Partners is an international law firm with presence in Vietnam, Myanmar and Mongolia, providing advice to foreign investors on a broad range of legal issues

TO START WITH YOUR first question, you are right that the Vietnamese government has recently made an effort to restrict the use of foreign currency within Vietnam. On December 26, 2013, the State Bank of Vietnam issued further guidance on this matter in Circular No. 32/2013/TT-NHNN (or simply Circular 32).

Circular 32, which applies to both resident and non-resident organizations and individuals, makes it clear that within the territory of Vietnam all transactions, payments, listings, advertisements, quotations, price fixings, and price recordings in contracts and agreements may not be conducted in a foreign currency. The circular provides, however, for several exceptions to this general rule. Residents, for example, are permitted to contribute capital in a foreign currency in order to implement a foreign investment project in Vietnam, whereas non-residents are permitted to record prices in contracts and to pay for the export of goods and services to residents in a foreign currency.

Another exception that is especially relevant to your situation is that employing organizations (whether they are resident or non-resident), and foreign employees (whether they are residents or non-resident) are permitted to reach an agreement in labor contracts on the payment of salaries, bonuses and allowances in a foreign currency. Therefore, your salary may be stated and paid in US dollars.

Circular 32 is also applicable to your second question, as it explicitly allows employees and employers to agree on paying and receiving salary, as well as bonuses and/or allowances, in cash. The foregoing complies with the Labor Code of Vietnam, which states that wages may be paid either in cash or through the personal bank account of an employee.

The newly issued Decree No. 222/2013/NĐ-CP on payments made by cash, which is effective from March 1, 2014, does not change anything for your specific situation. It does, however, further regulate and restrict payments in cash for a number of other transactions within the territory of Vietnam, such as securities transactions and transactions for the contribution of capital to an enterprise.

To conclude on a practical note, opening a bank account in Vietnam is usually not very complicated and there is a wide range of banks to choose from, both Vietnamese and foreign. It may be worth inquiring in advance about the documents that your preferred bank requires for opening an account with them. We wish you all the best with your new job!

If you have any legal questions you want answered, send them to legal@ovietnam.com. ■

Glassroom

Google Glass as a tool to learning English

Anh-Minh Do is the editor at TechInAsia.com for Vietnam focusing on technology startups, trends and companies. Minh also organizes events at Evecoo.vn

INNOVATION IN VIETNAM can come from the most interesting places. There's a startup with motorbike theft prevention hardware. There's one that crowd sources for tours. There's another that focuses totally on e-commerce logistics. And don't get me started on Flappy Bird. The list goes on. This week, Topica, one of Vietnam's most successful online learning platforms, is doing something a bit different with English education. The company, which was founded in 2008, already offers certification online, coordinates with colleges to offer online learning support, and also runs the Founder's Institute annual incubator program. Now it's experimenting with using Google Glass to teach students English. The program is called TopMito.

For example, Google Glass is being used to allow a teacher located at home to coach students who go to a local coffee shop in Hanoi. The coffee shop is working in coordination with Topica because it has foreign expat waiters who can interact with the students in English, allowing them to use English in a practical way. Thus, Glass allows the student to have a real-life conversation with a foreigner working at the coffee shop who speaks English, while also getting coaching from their teacher, who might be sitting at home.

The new experimental course with Glass started this month and so far has 30 students, while Topica already has over 1,000 English students on its education platform. Each of these students will have one live Google Glass session per week. Four other students – not counting the Glass-wearing student in the coffee shop having the lesson – will be able to stream the session online and learn alongside the Glass-equipped student. Throughout the week, students can attend each other's sessions, which run from 8am to 10pm every day.

In the future, the course will move beyond coffee shops and follow students around supermarkets, bars, tourist spots, and any other location where they can practice conversational English. Eventually, the course may even get Vietnamese celebrities to go abroad, using Glass, and interact in English and subsequently broadcast that interaction for students to see how the celebrities are getting on and communicating effectively in another language. Pham Minh Tuan, the founder of Topica, says they only have one Glass unit right now, but they're ordering a second one. Finally, someone has a way to use Google Glass other than for dating. ■
